

Beauty is a Planet

(By Annie Loboda)

Beauty is a planet called Earth I heard them say
With painted skies and crystal oceans crashing down blue waves
Where life blossoms and flowers bloom in sweet green hills of grass
They ask why Earth day is important because many would solely laugh

What importance is a tree there are millions on the Earth
What is one can in the ocean it won't destroy the world
Yes Earth is old yet still can hold billions of butterflies
Stars will shine and the sun will rise the same as it always has

One day of celebration is dedicated to our planet
That we walk on and talk on without a thought about it
But if it was never created we would be nothing but stardust
Appreciate the world appreciate its works

No matter how many times you may hurt
There is green grass seeping through the cracks
And new life blooming within
Your garden
